

Business Writing for Impact: How to Write So People Will Read

With all the messages business people are bombarded with on a daily basis, it is more critical than ever to write effective communications. How can you ensure that your email or letter is the one that gets read and acted on first? Spend a day learning and practicing techniques for creating clear, concise business communications that get your reader's attention and response.

Learning Objectives:

- Examine why writing skills are critical to business and career success.
- Analyze audience communication styles and how to compose messages to match.
- Use a process to structure business communications clearly and actionably.
- Implement strategies to buffer "bad news" in emails and letters to customers.
- Develop business email acumen with strategies for improving readability by editing and proofreading.
