

Josh Miller

Project50

Josh Miller is one of the most dynamic thought leaders in the world of next-generation talent engagement. As the co-founder of Project50, a company whose mission is to help organizations improve their early career programs, he combines his unique perspective as a 21-year-old college student with industry-leading research to help organizations recruit, retain, and engage the next generation of talent. He's founded several companies centered around reaching young people and has been featured at more than 50 conferences and symposiums across North America. He's authored several whitepapers, been featured in leading international publications, and has been described as dynamic and thoughtful in how he approaches his work.